Most of us learn our parenting skills from our parents. Hopefully, they were guided by the Bible and not by therapy books. And like our parents, we so often try to be better at parenting.

Then our children grow up, marry, and start families of their own (Gen. 2:23, 24). And depending on whom they marry will have a bearing on their faithfulness to God. That is proven by the new generation who arose during the days of the judges (Judges 2:10).

So to me there are three ground breaking rules in being a godly parent. First, be the best you can be! Attend services, participate, and worship diligently are key ingredients to holiness.

Second, do all you can do! God knows you are not perfect. Yet, He does expect parents to do every thing necessary to prepare their minds to serve Him (Eph. 6:1-4).

Third, love the best you can love! Love is a continual staircase. Like Peter who had no clue what agape love was (Jn. 21:15-17), he eventually learned. When raising children ones patience is tested. Love is never difficult just transitional. And when the day comes for them to fly the coop, we must always be there for them when their wings get clipped.
